

Dani Bonnet

In life there is so many different things to spend your time on. Beauty can be created when you ignore the urges to do something else and instead focus your time on attempted mastery in one field. This has been my experience in pursuing neon.

My first year, nearly everything I bent ended in the garbage. The second year my success rate got a little better, and by the third I started to be able to really make the art I was dreaming of creating. There still is the constant struggle with the glass. Some days everything goes smoothly, some days you feel like you can't do anything right. The difference is pushing forward regardless of the frustrations and getting in the studio to create day after day.

These pieces are the result of my love and my singular focus towards my craft.
